

Nancy Wood has gained a wealth of experience, not only through the work that she has carried out on behalf of Aboriginal communities, but also from her early career working in the Canadian mining industry and at the Ontario government at the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines as a Policy Advisor.

Nancy received a Mining Technicians diploma from the Haileybury School of Mines. She lived in various northern Canadian communities while employed within the mining industry. She returned to school at the University of Guelph, where she studied Management Economics, followed by an MBA from Laurentian University. She settled in south western Ontario in 1996, and has lived in Elora for the past 13 years.
